

The proposed changes in FCC rules about media deregulation should be delayed until something resembling a democratic process takes place to examine more closely the effects of said rule changes. Americans simply don't want a few big corporations controlling their access to information and entertainment.